

were one of the top dance and show bands in the New York City area.

The guys in the group chose their name because they like to play creative music on a funky base. Clarence Bassett, originally with Shep & The Limelights, is their musical director. They all get together several times a week in their own rehearsal studio in Queens, N.Y., which they plan to convert into a recording studio soon.

Despite their initial success, Creative Funk is keeping cool. They all want to finish school first. Veedett attends York College, Denzil goes to Brooklyn College and Gary is a student at Bronx Community College. The other members are in high school.

Judging by what they've already accomplished, Creative Funk will go a long way. As one reviewer who saw Creative Funk at the Apollo observed, "This apparently will not be one of those groups you hear on top today, and never hear from again." You'll be hearing about Creative Funk.
